Motion capture technology allows the players' bodies to be modelled and used as a controller for the player's movements and interaction with the football. This means that all 22 players move naturally through the game, providing a true-to-life experience. And that's not all. Every player in the game has been given a unique style, with their own playing style, physical attributes and expression. Their styles manifest as skill sets - including ball control, dribbling, shooting and speed - each uniquely tailored to match the player's strength. Eight, distinct play styles - from tight-knit defensive teams to explosive counter-attacking sides - are now available through the Customize screen, allowing players to create a team that suits their personal playing style. Play styles can be unlocked through gameplay and influenced by team performance. FIFA 23 will also include real-life player names, similar to those in EA SPORTS FIFA 19. A new update for EA SPORTS Football Club will be released on March 5 which will allow players to save transfers, earn badges, and show their progress as they play together within their Clubs. An update to FIFA Ultimate Team will also be released, which will remove the Seasons system and add a Leaderboard, allowing players to compare their high scores to other players around the world. Official launch details for FIFA 21 will be revealed soon.
